Local folklore tells us of a most terrible curse that was laid on this here free-house. Locals know and so should you that for over two hundred years, the Bottles have not been touched or the curse tested.

Legend has it that over two hundred years ago, a former proprietor was putting his bottles of beer into the window for display and advertisement. When fate would play its wicked game. Death would creep upon his soul. A coroner would later report a massive heart attack, but locals suspect more eerie forces were at play.

The bottles have remained untouched in the window since the day he died.

Now this is where opinions are divided some say that with his final breath, he laid the curse upon bottles, while others say that his soul-mate and widow could not live with his loss and placed the deadly curse upon them before she passed over to the other side.

But all agree that the curse is real and in over 200 years no mortal soul has dared to test it. Any man, woman or child who touches the Dirty Bottles would follow in the former proprietor's untimely demise.

More recent proprietors and landlords have spoken of an unhappy spirit that now haunts this very building with the rattling of glass on glass and foul oaths to be heard when all else is quiet.
